Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Call of the Flag Adelle - I fail to see where the bravery comes in. What is the sense in a capable young man like yourself getting out and training men to be mere soldiers? Gilbert - You forget I am a West Pointer. Besides, I am an American all the way through Adelle - O, you are making a mountain out of a wart. Don t you think so, Mrs. Bourne Mrs. B. Now, - this is yours and Gilbert s war. You must fight it out. I will referee. Adelle - I guess that is what you call neutrality. But, really now, won t you say he is crossing the bridge before he comes to it? Mrs. B. - My housekeeping experience has taught me that the best time to fill and trim the lamps is early in the morning. David - (L) Hello, Gilbert.(Mrs. B. and Adelle converse.) Gilbert - Hello, old scout. I just ran in to tell you the training camp is a go. I have in my pocket authority to proceed. David - Then let s proceed. (Nods towards Adelle.) By first meeting the lady. Gilbert - Sure, old bachelor. I am glad to see you getting interested in the fair sex. But I warn you to expect no sympathy from her. (Takes D. s arm.) David - Even so. Our first enemy is a fair one. To the charge. (They go R.) Gilbert - Miss Alban, this is my friend, David Bourne. David - (Advances and shakes hands.) How do you do, Miss Alban. I am glad to meet you. Adelle - I am glad to...
