How does the electronic health record affect clinician-patient communication? Medicine and Horsemanship is a Stanford University-based student elective and Continuing Medical Education course that employs horses to teach non-verbal communication and other interpersonal skills for the clinician-patient relationship and all professional interactions. Now with the Manual of Medicine and Horsemanship-Transforming the Doctor-Patient Relationship with Equine-Assisted Learning, anyone with an EAL, EAP, EGE, or EFEL practice can conduct Medicine and Horsemanship. You will learn the practical and philosophical principles of teaching good bedside manner. You will get detailed, step-by-step exercises needed to conduct equine-assisted learning programs for medical students and healthcare professionals. New for 2016: Included in the purchase price is a flash drive with Version 3 of lesson plans, handouts, promotional photos and videos, administrative forms, and a PowerPoint presentation suitable for Grand Rounds. The flash drive is shipped to you when you fill in the order form on page 83 of the Manual or e-mail me with confirmation of purchase at Purchase also includes a 1/2-hour consultation with the author to assist you in establishing Medicine and Horsemanship at a medical center near you.
